DETAILED ACTION

Response to Arguments

1. Applicant's arguments filed on 12/28/06 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive. The Applicant response primarily provides a general legal discussion concerning what is considered statutory subject matter under 35 USC 101. In the conclusion on page 8, the Applicant states "Applicant respectfully contends that the term 'baseline significance signature is defined and/or explained with sufficient specificity to allow a person of ordinary skill in the art to appreciate the meaning and scope of the claims.' However, nowhere in the specification or claims does the Applicant demonstrate where this definition is contained. The general legal discussion and abstract argument provided by the Applicant does not answer the specific deficiencies enumerated in the rejection.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

2. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

Claims 1-15 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention is directed to non-statutory subject matter.

The invention is directed to a process that only manipulates abstract ideas or concepts. The phrase "baseline significance signature" is used throughout the specifications and is recited in the claims. It is never defined in the specification. A search of the literature for "baseline significance signature" yielded zero results. The specification also attempts to relate the "baseline significance signature" with "discriminant analysis". Discriminant analysis is a tool used by statisticians to determine whether groups differ with regard to the mean of a variable and then to predict group membership. Discriminant analysis may be considered a one way Analysis of Variance in the Design of Experiments. The specification discusses "discriminant analysis" in some context with "baseline significance signature", "evolutionary" change, "features", "decision trees" and "superset" etc., but does not describe a functioning real world application which results in a concrete output such as an analysis table, a set of recommendations, etc. The specification does not describe a practical manner of combining the undefined and semi-defined terms into a practical application, which can yield some real measure of an "evolutionary change". The specification states that "An Event Prediction Neugent" is trained through clustering of historical data of a system", but does not describe how this is implemented or how it relates to the other elements such as "baseline significance signature". In addition to the process being directed to a manipulation of abstract ideas, since the terminology is either undefined or its use is not explained, the abstract elements lack logical structure. That is, even as a manipulation of abstract ideas, the logical flow is not explained.
